Another set of items recently suggested by LCLI Fellows for sharing with all, each with brief information and clickable links.

"The Out Crowd" - What 'remain in Mexico' really means (Pulitzer Prize)

'Let's Feed the World Without Depleting Natural Resources' (Soil Capital)

Unfinished Symphony: South Africa (Nat. Geographic Nobel Prize Short)

'Community Action Networks' - Response to COVID-19

'The Out Crowd' - What 'Remain in Mexico' Really Means

"The Out Crowd" won the first Pulitzer Prize ever awarded to a radio show - a disturbing report from This American Life on what the Trump administration's "Remain in Mexico" policy actually means, on the ground, at the Mexican border.

Just over an hour long listen, the narratives have echoes across the world

'Let's Feed the World Without Depleting Natural Resources'

If you wonder what emerging regenerative agriculture is about, something several of our Fellows are aware of, then Soil Capital, based in Belgium, is an example of a group that works to "restore the natural fertility of agroecosystems" so as to capture more carbon than they emit, while producing "nutrient-dense food, clean water and abundant biodiversity." Worth noting

Unfinished Symphony: South Africa (NatGeo)

19 minutes of a National Geographic Nobel Prize Shorts series, on the Miagi Orchestra, as new generations search through music to find each other across the massive racial and economic divides of South Africa.

'Community Action Networks' - Response to COVID-19

Community Actions Networks (CANs) are springing up in South Africa, first in Cape Town, offering a very different way of responding to COVID-19 and its impact on those who systematically marginalized by powerful political or economic interests. A key question is whether they can be sustained post-COVID beyond any crisis response. The foundations are promising and here are some insights into what they are and how they work (two files).

'Pathfinder Series': How our Zoom Interaction Continues

We will continue to use Zoom to allow for some connection between Fellows. This will, for the next while, take the form of what we are calling our "Pathfinder Series". Each will be an hour long (shorter than before) and feature an interview with one person on an issue of expressed interest or concern for our Fellows, followed by extended discussion between all participants.

The first theme: Disparities and Equity

Our first two interviewees: Sunny Anand (July 2) & Horst Kleinschmidt (July 23)
