A Question to Fellows: LCL and 'Measurement' ... Can it be done?

Carpenters say, 'measure twice, cut once.' Many of us in the LCLI consciously approach our day jobs informed by the leading causes. So how do we measure LCL? What can and should be measured, what not? Can we learn from each other about this? Surely, yes - and that is the question to you.

In short, what are the minimum specifications for the knowing side of working with life?

If it's all about complexity and living systems, how do we know what to notice? What measures lend life to life? Can't be simplistic but must be consistent with the dynamics of life - not backward looking, more like handing out flashlights at dusk to explore less familiar yet rich terrain, helping build a genuine discipline of practice.

What is your view as a Fellow? ... What are the possibilities and limits, value and dangers, of measurement? What approach, methods or tools do you think fitting?
